

Rhode Island College Pipeline Data Profile

How Prepared are Rhode Island Students for Postsecondary Success?

HIGH SCHOOL READINESS

National Assessment of Educational Progress performance and algebra-taking in the early years suggest how well prepared students will be for a rigorous high school curriculum.

THE EDUCATION PIPELINE AND THE FUTURE OF RHODE ISLAND

- Assuming existing patterns of high school completion and migration continue, the number of high school graduates in Rhode Island will decrease between 5 and 10% by 2015 (ii).
- Hispanic and American Indian/Alaska Native graduates from public schools in Rhode Island are projected to increase by 36 and 77%, respectively, from their 2004-05 levels. Meanwhile, White non-Hispanics and Asians/Pacific Islanders are expected to decline by 19 and 20%, respectively. The number of Black non-Hispanics graduates will be basically unchanged from 2004-05 levels (ii).
- By 2014, 78% of jobs in Rhode Island will require some college or training beyond high school (iii).
